PUBLIC SECTOR PROCUREMENT MANAGEMENT

Public sector procurement has a unique role in the accomplishment of efficient and effective governance, the role made even more important for financially-tight emerging economies such as Pakistan's. The way the business of procurement is managed is a direct reflection of a public sector organisation's performance.

This 4-day focused programme will prepare the public and private (those working for public sector) sector administrators in initiating and managing procurement projects. The skills acquired will help the participants, who are expected to come from various functional units, to enhance the performance of their procurement processes as well as conduct them in the light of PPRA rules. The programme will help the officers to understand the public sector procurement philosophy, methods, best practices, and underlying trade-offs for becoming better leaders as well as team players in the procurement process. The programme will also enable the participants to monitor and control procurement performance to seek maximum value with limited resources in public sector organisations.

BENEFITS

Through a blend of local and regional case studies and exercises, the participants will be able to:

- Understand the principles of public sector procurement management
- Apply PPRA rules in their procurement activities
- Understand the various procurement methods, practices, processes and tools used for improving procurement and associated trade-offs
- Be comfortable with E-Procurement and the value it brings to the overall procurement process
- Lead procurement activities in public sector organisations
- Develop bid document
- Manage execution and closure of procurement contracts

WHO SHOULD ATTEND

The programme is designed for:

- Administrators and procurement managers in public sector organisations
- General administration and procurement officers in provincial and federal government
- Managers from private contractors working with public sector organisations
